Tipping Our Hand to Reds

Allen Dulles is absolutely right that are telling Russia too much. The director of the central intelligence agency has just spoken out against it, but much more should be said. Some control of what is printed in this country about our defense plans, progress in making bombs, new planes and so on has been delayed far too long.

It has been said—and it's probably true—that Russia doesn't need a spy system in the U. S. A. All it needs is to subscribe to the right technical, scientific and popular journals printed each month, to learn all that a whole army of spies could discover by hush-hush methods. Mr. Dulles seems to agree with this idea and we hope that what he thinks gets translated into greater defense safety measures.
